Cultural Daily

Independent Voices, New Perspectives

Anne Elezabeth Pluto: Three Poems

Anne Elezabeth Pluto · Thursday, December 1st, 2022

Fog

Dove gray farm weather inside the house wearing a sweater – summer solstice now over – the days no longer rain in the forecast – horses stamp in the barn later - led out to be saddled – my hair in my eyes fog in the morning – rolls over by the kitchen window holding the luminous cups – waiting for my father – asleep upstairs beside my mother – the house the house – its own silent entity grandfather in the big garden turning over the earth – grandmother whispering to the icons – I am dreaming, standing - parting the curtains to see the dove gray fog lift praying for sun – and the world to roll over.

*

Brighton Beach Was Never Venice

for Lisa Levine

Green water – South pacific or Adriatic – dream water Grand Canal to Carnival. the masks they wore were not Made in Italy intermittent Mother tender water masks where they could not go – Brighton Beach it beckons still – water wave crashing save, still from the rocky reef refuge – the teeming shoreline left behind – an ocean supported surrendered between two world wars and a generation, lost they swam with the fishes, watched the man in white, who sold knishes and fed us from their wedding dishes – sea salty air and shoulders bare – Brighton Beach was never Venice.

*

I have been to Samarqand

for my father

Two years ago
May now as you made yourself ready for death I wanted to remain, relieve her of her duty and be a good daughter.
You sent me home to die with her alone.

I have been to Samarqand that final time a journey by water the dream geography more full than life, the mosque, the church the covered women singing the Stations of the Cross the goblin boat to take me back by morning I travel by train, north and walk to the park, it's hot and burning to see the icons at the Met to look into the eyes of each and every opalescent Virgin in the house of the father she guides the souls in comfort to Samarra. Her eyes

follow me, at home

I present you a gift war traveler who prayed at every house of the father St. Sophia's in Kiev, the Friday Mosque of Tashkent, the Bucharian Synagogue on Sepyornaya Street the tomb of the Prophet Daniel where his stolen bones grow the stops along the bloody way in Iran, Iraq, in Syria then Lebanon, in Egypt and Palestine, in Bethlehem at the Church of the Nativity where the Ottoman Turks had made the doorways four feet high to keep the wild horsemen out to Jerusalem where they meet God as three a trinity of one almighty city to destroy the houses of the father a caravansary on the journey backwards to Samarra you put messages in the wall went into the Holy Sepulcher and stumbled along the Viva Dolorosa saw the dome of the rock where Mohammed rode a winged stallion to Heaven across the Mediterranean in Monte Casino you protected the mountain then the monastery and in Rome lifted your face to the ceiling

Now hear the word of God as the pain goes through you like hot lead
as your bones move lengthwise into sleep upon the bed.
I have brought your last book in prescience and redemption in secret and in silence open it, alone, look study the compassionate

of the Sistine Chapel.

face of Mary the distant face of Christ the icons we cannot escape imprinted on us since baptism, I hear you pray and I pray too for your life that spanned the century let the light hold fast enter Hagia Sophia the final house of the father go then, backwards to Samarra leave your shoes at the door see Christ who never was removed before your destiny is achieved, explore.

A rise, and go Vladimir for the kingdom of Heaven is upon you.

Purchase THE DEEPEST PART OF DARK by Anne Elezabeth Pluto

This entry was posted on Thursday, December 1st, 2022 at 8:25 pm and is filed under Poetry You can follow any responses to this entry through the Comments (RSS) feed. You can leave a response, or trackback from your own site.