Apryl Skies: Two Poems

Apryl Skies · Wednesday, February 25th, 2015

Apryl Skies, an LA native, is an award-winning author of A Song Beneath Silence and Skye the Troll & Other Fairy Tales for Children. The latter, Skye the Troll has been adapted to clay animation winning the 2010 Gold Pixie award by the American Pixel Academy. Skies is founder and editor of Edgar & Lenore's Publishing House of Sherman Oaks and with several titles hitting the number one best-sellers list for Amazon, she is currently building solid momentum in the publishing industry.

Panty-less at the Annenberg on Saturday Seemed Apropos

I. Cassiopeia

Avant garde in two dimensional black and white with a kiss of shiny crimson stilettos bleeding through a lens ready to incinerate.
A bicycle chain locked around cobra-crossed ankles, fishnet pantyhose stretch thin.
Submission spread across glossy pages mold girls into women.

II. Reflections of a Nude Model

Gazing at almost perfection is staring down the barrel of a loaded .38 special

is gazing at almost perfection wishing to be orchid or child again.

III. Luminous Transfixion

She speaks in tongues without uttering a single word, language is in the eyes, the anatomical makeup of illusionary grandeur

In her musical movement which stages the sun as a hot lamp just long enough to expose luminosity.

Did June ever wonder who Helmut imagined
when he was inside her?

a capella

there is a page I continue to turn to where a southern pacific marine layer dissipates over a valley horizon.

angels are imagined but fall hard despite such hopeful wings.
there is eye contact over whiskey and wine, an a capella rendition of song few have heard.

time releases a universal pause, music is made, art adored and poetry perceived in an empty glass on a lacquered, oak wood bar.

he knows the exact shade of her eyes, she his (she is reminded of clouds) over the slow flame of Leonard Cohen, the blue burn of Coltrane and Armstrong.

it is a thing of alchemy here in this darkened room, absorbing the sunshine of each other's bones.
