Cultural Daily

Independent Voices, New Perspectives

Gerri Lucas: Two Poems

Gerri Lucas · Wednesday, February 5th, 2020

Bone

He complimented me on my back, my shoulders, told me, you have the frame of a bird—

all delicate & fragile.

After making love, he fingertip-traced from neck to collarbone, dipped into hollows between flesh & bone, said he wanted to be Picasso, make me his masterpiece. Blushing,

I smiled & giggled.

I knew little about Picasso, except his figures were distorted, parts painted in odd places—disfigured & broken. His gentle touches became gouges, compliments snapped to corrections, Eat only fruits & vegetables.

Wrap up in cellophane, sweat your structure out.

He said I'd be beautiful, once he carved me down—

all bone & no meat.

I allowed him to dream his delusion of me, let him probe the tiny spaces between rib & vertebrae. He left bruises with every I love you, commanded me to disrobe & stand before him. Told me to expel the air from my lungs, make my skeleton emerge. He pressed his thumbs & fingers hard into my hips' flesh, pushed forth my pelvis. When I complained, he shouted, Beauty & pain are the same, dear! When I am done, you will hurt, beautifully.

*

How to Build a Poet

fillet away all ligaments silvery and tough— debone flesh for tenderness and ease of chew. Unbutton each rib individually, have church with every organ, commune of body and blood.

Tithe in muscle mass and skeleton, chop away cartilage until blind, pull nails from beds, enjoy the bloody separation. Scrape cells from mouth, smear them on slides, view their beginning in strands. Use them to spark the remembrance of structure, study the connective tissue, bathe it in sun. Rearrange its boney pews, raise them like chapel beams, rebuild, despite gravity, and regrow solid, from the rafters up.

(Author photo by Levi Williams)

This entry was posted on Wednesday, February 5th, 2020 at 8:53 am and is filed under Poetry You can follow any responses to this entry through the Comments (RSS) feed. You can skip to the end and leave a response. Pinging is currently not allowed.