
Cultural Daily

Independent Voices, New Perspectives

John Dorsey: Four Poems

John Dorsey · Wednesday, April 13th, 2016

John Dorsey is the author of several collections of poetry, including Sodomy is a City in New Jersey (American Mettle Books, 2010), Tombstone Factory (Epic Rites Press, 2013) and most recently, Appalachian Frankenstein (GTK Press, 2015). His work has been nominated for the Pushcart Prize. He may be reached at archerevans@yahoo.com

The Deer Hunter

in greensburg
every boy dreamt of getting a hunting license by the age of 12 talking about pickup trucks shell casings and what sort of antlers they wanted to have hanging on the wall in their parents basement pat was legally blind at birth but wanted to be the pride of his moose lodge just like everyone else turned down flat after an eye exam he waited until after dark before going into the closet to find his father's favorite rifle and headed out into the woods after a few hours spent freezing his ass off in faded camouflage cut offs he heard something coming toward him and fired rapidly into the night as the sun came up he struggled to push a dying cow across several fields to his house thinking the whole time that he had bagged the biggest deer in the county and after his father was forced to pay a very angry farmer 800 bucks he never heard the end of it when he got engaged years later someone said, "why buy the cow, when you can get the milk for free?"

 he just winced
 saying that even milk ran down his lips
 like blood.

Pam

once told me i was sexier than jesus but then everyone looks better at 3:30 in the morning when you're microwaving a frozen burrito that was before she started sleeping with the building's resident heroin dealer that was before the fights and the restless nights at the cherry street mission once she invited me into her room covered with porno tapes from the 1970's for a sex toy party on her birthday i told her i had to run out and that just because i was smart enough not to step in a puddle during a lightning storm that didn't mean that i could walk on water.

Patrice

once told terry
 "i'm serving it up on a silver platter, you're just not coming to dinner."
 dead by the age of thirty her heart exploded on the inside like a malfunctioning volcano at an 8th grade science fair leaving behind three small children by as many fathers the daughter of a millionaire whose money didn't help her sleep at night

an artist turned crackwhore she said that picking the perfect rock was like shopping for produce and that sucking cock could be an art too.

Eric

worked part time as a driver for his older sister's escort service and played guitar on the weekends smoking weed sunup to sundown once offering me the pipe that's when he told me that he had switched to crack just for inspiration's sake and i motioned him away but when our friend patrice got hooked it was eric who saved her from a near pistol whipping from the biggest coke dealer in the city eric who told me about how he had to toss his girlfriend around the room once smacking her head into a cast iron radiator just to get off eric who may or not have raped a young painter on the second floor causing her to run off like a frightened animal in the middle of the night eric who choked his best friend unconscious in the front parking lot on a sunny afternoon before heading back in to listen to curtis mayfield and smoke away what was left of the crumbling marble that was his humanity.

(Author photo by Casey Rearick)

This entry was posted on Wednesday, April 13th, 2016 at 4:18 pm and is filed under Poetry You can follow any responses to this entry through the Comments \(RSS\) feed. You can leave a response, or trackback from your own site.

