

Cultural Daily

Independent Voices, New Perspectives

Kelly Cressio-Moeller: Three Poems

Kelly Cressio-Moeller · Wednesday, November 5th, 2014

Kelly Cressio-Moeller is a poet whose new work is forthcoming in Escape Into Life and Spillway. She has been previously published in Boxcar Poetry Review, Crab Creek Review, Crab Orchard Review, Poet Lore, Rattle, Redwood Coast Review, The Sand Hill Review, Southern Humanities Review, Tinderbox Poetry Journal, THRUSH Poetry Journal, Valparaiso Poetry Review, and ZYZZYVA, as well as the anthology First Water: Best of Pirene's Fountain and Diane Lockward's book, The Crafty Poet.

It's 5 O'Clock Somewhere (24 Cocktails)

A guy walks into a bar.

The Singapore Sling is in full-swing. He spies
a voluptuous white Russian,
downs a shot of liquid courage;
the thrumming rum pulls
him toward the eye of her storm.

Leaning in, he whispers:
How 'bout some sex on the beach?
Never one to miss the makings
of a screaming orgasm,
she quickly hails a cab,
checkered as her past.
A bowl of scorpions
in backseat flame & writhe.

The coast is everclear.
Deep mudslide kisses
crash over his brain.
She's hankering to nuzzle
his fuzzy navel, to unleash her
hot pink squirrel.

*Linger awhile, my gimlet, thou art so fair. Sweet seduction scatters like paper umbrellas & empty matchbooks. She flips off her silk Japanese slippers; his cotton cabled sweater unravels
on a rusty nail. Naked*

surfers with salty dogs
ignore the flock of grey geese
overhead. Kamikaze sake bombs
go off all night, shimmering
on an absinthe sea. A tequila
sunrise surprises their ripened eyes,
waking to the call of a mockingbird.

Dusk at Mt. Diablo

Selfishness is not living as one wishes to live, it is asking others to live as one wishes to live.
~ Oscar Wilde

The drive to Devil's Mountain takes only half an hour.

Everyone agreed, including his killer, he was a beautiful boy.

Visitors should plan to be in their vehicles before sunset.

All her life she was quick to flame and smolder.

Note typed. Animals euthanized. Biding her time.

They hiked a short trail to Lookout Point. She snapped his photo.

The darkest hours can pass in daylight.

She hated her ex-husband more than she loved her son.

A starless sky still shines as bright.

Three bullets when one would have been enough.

Years pass. We shelve our rage.

Throats of crows caw and scatter – the beat of black wings carries over the valley.

If only she had shot herself first.

Double Helix

I am growing thick in the middle again,
 an avalanche over the waistband.
 Those pounds I strong-willed away,
 unwelcomed back into newly upholstered cells. A scale is unnecessary. Last summer's clothes now grab my breasts and thighs with graceless but determined ardor.
 My corduroys brush and spark.
 Strict exceptions become the reckless rules.
 The last pastry or bread slice becomes a second or third. What am I trying to feed?
 How I green-eye marvel at those women
 who sit straight-backed and cross-legged in simple chairs, effortless as their unlabored breathing.
 My lumbering limbs wince and blush.
 Such slender tenderness my body has never known. Where to rest when your nest of skin feels cold as wintergreen dusk? I think of my parents riding under the weight
 of themselves, careening down
 demented diabetic roads, bread-crumbed days
 spent wiped and bathed as their bodies surrender
 to decades of excessive hunting and gathering.
 My sleep plays hopscotch, each night falling further from the last. I've lost count of the recurring dream where a black bear, rearing full height upon its hind legs, swings inadequate claws at a half-hearted moon. All through these nights of humorless stars, I hear bits of life cry out, each
 skating their separate darkness: a heron's snapped wing,
 a loon's lonely wail, my burdened bones.

("Double Helix" was first published in Gargoyle, Issue 60, Summer 2013)

This entry was posted on Wednesday, November 5th, 2014 at 4:19 pm and is filed under Poetry.
 You can follow any responses to this entry through the Comments \(RSS\) feed. You can leave a response, or trackback from your own site.