Mark Statman: Three Poems

Mark Statman · Thursday, March 23rd, 2023

some history

we lived in darkness
disease
a place of disease
and fire the earth opens up
the buildings come down the people come down villages
swallowed by rage
fear they disappear
into dust there's dust everywhere it
seals the disappearance disappeared

home I take a pañuelo (bandana)
clean the dust off my teeth my face and look at the mountains our fields my neighbor's sheep
and goats herded
by his children

on the walk today on the dirt roads called highway a boy had appeared in blood he seemed out of nowhere a truck had come by a sudden scream the truck was gone

and the boy from a village hours away he'd been attacked beaten he had no money he had nothing they'd thrown him in the back of the truck they'd driven hours
and just here
dumped him
dusty ravine we stood there myself some farmers suddenly emerged from the woods and gullies men women a family came by in a pickup stopped to see this crying
beaten boy
maybe thirteen he held out his arms dust blood I gave him some water what else could I do we watched as he walked into a field a woman
with a machete
went to him
she talked came back our small helpless group she was shaking her head
she said something about God he walked in circles
he fell down and we stood there needing a doctor in this place we don't have one

on the road

take the coastline and mountains as serenity and justice fierce battalion of caracara and falcons every step and twist and turn it's a meeting of the minds serpent on my wrist the lizard they want entry into paradise there is no paradise there are footprints body prints platanos in the trees and cocos frios at the road stands bottles of mezcal silver glass glitter in afternoon sunlight everyone on the side of the road half-naked in the heat water steams off them they wave at passing cars at airplanes overhead we all are going somewhere fate perdition paradise a weave of time
of courage
and sky raptors it takes hold with the music on the radio all the boys love Mary Ann in the air with the windows open and jasmine

besame

as if the last time as if the stars aligned their singing constellations the choral kiss and embrace

me as if the meaning of rain and the meaning of sleep the meaning of order the meaning of erasure
told stories

tell

where in the world I'll go after the last words the last hallelujah the amen
of being aligns with a
walk up and down the stairs thirsty for a glass of water

how

the house empties

alone among the voices I'll struggle my loss of words and I'll ask of you forgiveness
a ceremony
to replace resolve we resolve we listening
beso

that song
