Cultural Daily

Independent Voices, New Perspectives

Meet Me @ the Metro

Adam Leipzig · Thursday, August 30th, 2012

Billed as the “largest participatory extravaganza in the US,” Los Angeles’ Meet Me @ Metro takes riders on a journey through four of the city’s metro stations, and treats them to performances along the way. Beginning at Union Station with a precisely-choreographed dance by event organizer Watts Village Theater Company, highlighted by Andrea Zuniga’s soulful singing, the performances take place at the Mariachi Plaza, Soto and the East La Civic Center metro stations, then return to Union Station to conclude the dance piece, which, fittingly, is about travel expanded as a metaphor for life’s passage.

Meet Me @Metro, runs again this weekend. It costs $20, which includes lunch and an all-day metro pass you can use to explore the city further.

Images, top to bottom: Performers ride the metro with audience members; Company of Strangers performs at Soto station; Rogue Artists Ensemble leads a procession beside the lake at East LA Civic Center.

This entry was posted on Thursday, August 30th, 2012 at 3:57 am and is filed under Theatre, Music
You can follow any responses to this entry through the Comments (RSS) feed. You can leave a response, or trackback from your own site.