Michele McDannold: Two Poems

Michele McDannold · Wednesday, August 27th, 2014

Michele McDannold was the Editor-in-Chief at Red Fez Publications for five years and is currently the editor/publisher at Citizens for Decent Literature Press. She has an extensive collection of flannel and rubber chicken heads. She lives in a place called the Jhole and does various odd jobs at The Literary Underground and Ppiggenn. Michele is currently finishing up her first full-length collection of poetry called Stealing the Midnight from a Handful of Days.

And now she goes by some other name trina was the skinniest girl i had ever seen hip bones sticking out

pale,
yellowish skin and terrible hair but she had a kindness and mystical way about her that was captivating

for a while she was wiccan
a couple times
a Buddhist
and always with the tarot cards

she took me to my first rocky horror show
we formed a coven
the boys brought flowers
mowed the lawn
wrote poems
sketches,
long into the night
acid trips in the park
and no need for explanations

the worst and most harmful was the multiple personality disorder i never did buy it

it didn't really matter though after the third abortion when she told me,
"i went into the bathroom
when he was done.
took the condom out of the trash and shoved it up there."

one could fairly say her mind broke then
in some abortion clinic
out west
where he held her hand
watching the light fade right out of her.

lolz

it's not my fault
i was born into a redneck town
that hates niggers
and hides the innocence of children
under a riverbed

poor, in a trailer
at a relative's
passed around
from one abuse
to the next

when you learn certain things too early
it fucks your head

but i am not your victim sorry, diet fads
sorry, dr phil

the funniest thing i ever heard at a poetry reading
was a rape poem

i expect neither of us
needs to apologize
