

Cultural Daily

Independent Voices, New Perspectives

Robbi Nester: Two Poems

Robbi Nester · Thursday, March 15th, 2018

Veils: A Room, A Door, a Light in the Upstairs Hall, After a painting by Robert Rhodes

Every evening, shadows lay their veils over the familiar and the movie starts.
I pass my hand through the projector's dusty beam, watch it weave a stream of motes into another world.
I hardly need to leave my room to see the moon, perfectly composed behind a screen of branches, transmute the purple half-light from an open window, playing for hours on the bedroom wall.

*

Mold

In the sealed white fridge, inviolate, I thought but I was wrong, potions brewed all by themselves, forgotten leftovers harboring a culture various in scent and hue as any garden. In the plastic cube, a slimy orange substance seethes on last week's stew.
A purple sludge escapes the confines of its round container.
And here, egg yolks sprouting white tendrils, a smell so pungent it could be a sound.
Potatoes ossifying in a covered dish, moss green as rocks half covered in the creek

I wandered as a child.
I know if I could study my own skin and gut, I'd find a population many times as various, another world.
Willingly or not,
we share this space.

[alert type=alert-white]Please consider making a tax-deductible donation now so we can keep publishing strong creative voices.[/alert]

This entry was posted on Thursday, March 15th, 2018 at 3:19 am and is filed under Poetry. You can follow any responses to this entry through the Comments \(RSS\) feed. You can skip to the end and leave a response. Pinging is currently not allowed.