Cultural Daily · Thursday, September 29th, 2011

*In the hands of a sensitive and innovative director, even something common as an anti-drug commercial can become a good movie. That's what director Nico Sabenorio achieved when he took an assignment for Life After Meth. This 6-minute mini-documentary has all the telltale signs of accomplished filmmaking: strong characters, visual craft, and a narrative structure you'd never get from a string of Facebook posts.*
