Cultural Daily

Independent Voices, New Perspectives

Underdone: A Nature Comic

Rob Lang · Wednesday, October 5th, 2016

Here's the first Underdone Comic – posted Jan 1, 2016. It features the endangered sawfish.

As the polar ice melts, killer whales are making their way further north and eating animals that aren't normally on their menu, like the narwhal.

When Cultural Weekly approached me to be a contributor to their magazine, I had no idea where to begin. I've made more than 200 comics this year—most of which are jokes about animals and conservation that are (somewhat) educational.

The octopus became a very shy critter after this incident.

Two good examples of comics that are somewhat educational and also somewhat funny (hopefully the two "somewhats" make a whole comic worth reading) are ones I made a few months ago about the new-found relationship between narwhals and orcas (due to polar warming) and a cute deep sea cephalopod called the dumbo octopus.

Underdone Comics are written and illustrated for folks of all ages. My goal is to entertain and educate people about the amazing diversity of life on our planet. Hopefully I'll do my small part to get people interested in the natural world and ultimately realize it's worth saving.

How about if we start out the first week with an early Underdone Comics collection? Here are Some Thoughts on Anteaters.

Ant Evasive Maneuvers

The Early Bird Gets the Tongue

There goes that colony.

Termite problems

Melodrama of the colony.

If you’d like to keep up with the weekday Underdone Comics grind, follow me on Instagram!
[alert type=alert-white]Please consider making a tax-deductible donation now so we can keep publishing strong creative voices.[/alert]

This entry was posted on Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 11:04 pm and is filed under Comics
You can follow any responses to this entry through the Comments (RSS) feed. You can leave a response, or trackback from your own site.